

THREE DARING BOY BURGLARS.

Woman to Whom They Said They Sold Their Plunder Arrested.

By Mary Cholmondeley, author of "Red Pottage."

much longer Evelyn, good-night. Good-night. Middledown. If it is too early for you to go to bed you will find a fire in the smoking room."

I have Evelyn good-night and followed Charles down the corridor. He replaced the lamp with a hand that was steady enough now, and went slowly across the pleasure-gallery. The way to my room led me through it also.

Involuntarily I stopped at the head of the great carved staircase which led into the hall, and watched him going down, step by step, with jagged tread. From the morning-room came the distant sound of a piano and a man's voice singing to it, singing softly, as though no Nemesis was approaching, singing slowly, as if there were time enough and to spare.

But Nemesis had reached the bottom of the staircase; Nemesis, with a heavy step, was going across the silent hall—was even now opening the door of the morning-room.

The door was gently closed again, and then, in the middle of a bar, the music stopped.

I look in the gray of the next morning to find Charles standing by my bed. He explained that he and Ralph were off to London by the early train in quest of Aurelia, and asked me to explain matters to Sir George.

I insisted on going with them, although both brothers made a pretext of being here by the last train last night. "Only two, sir. One of the young gentlemen from the rectory and a young lady, who were very near late, poor thing, and all wet with snow. All there is the engine at last!" as the train came in sight, and he went through the ceremony of ringing the bell, although we were the only travelers on the platform.

"Was only an hour's run to Tisbury, where we were to join the main line. What are we to do now?" said Charles, as the chimneys of Tisbury station were in sight and the train slackened. "Ten to one we shall not be able to get on to London."

"No, sir, either," said Ralph. "I shall see her! I shall see her here!" There was an air of excitement about the whole station as we drew up before the platform. Groups of railway officials were clustered together, talking eagerly; the barmen were all looking out of the refreshment-room door; policemen were stationed here and there, and outside the iron gates of the station a little crowd of people were waiting in the cold, snowy snow, peering through the bars.

We got out, and Charles went up to a respectable-looking man in black, evidently an official of some importance, and asked what was the matter. The man informed him that a special had been sent down the line with workmen to clear the rails, and that its return, James Lorenzo, ten years old, of 100 Mulberry street, was arrested at day-break this morning by Policemen Land and Mori and Grand streets. The lad was snatching home with two air guns slung across his shoulders.

He confessed that, with Michael Mieltoch, thirteen years old, and Salmo Lascalle, eleven years old, both of 231 Mulberry street, he had broken into the show window of a hardware store at 265 Canal street and stolen a number of air guns and a stereopticon.

The lads were arrested as well as Angelo Gioliano, of 187 Mulberry street, in whose yard the stereopticon was located.

The trio then confessed to another robbery, and Mrs. Mary Junta, of 17 Marion street, to whom they said they sold the proceeds, was locked up.

Fall from His French Pistol.

John Craig, sixty-three years old, of 217 India street, Brooklyn, died at Chatham Hospital this morning from injuries received by a fall from his trunk. Craig was joined from his seat and sustained a compound fracture of the skull to clear the rails, and that its return,
